

PHOTOS: Beautiful Start to a Spring-like Day in Midwest, Northeast

By Becky Elliott

March 16, 2015; 10:10 AM ET

The weather today across much of the country will be a brief tease of Spring before another blast of colder air makes us all shiver once again. Temperatures across the Midwest and into the Northeast will be as much as 20 to 30 degrees above what is typical for mid-March.

Unfortunately this warmth will be short-lived. By Wednesday, temperatures will take a downward plunge and highs across the Northeast will be 10-20 degrees below normal.

Let's take time today to appreciate the warmth and beautiful weather while we can. It seems as if the atmosphere knew it was going to feel fantastic today and wanted to echo that in the sky as the sun was rising. Scenes from Earth Cam and photos taken by folks on Twitter portrayed an abundance of beauty this morning.

Here are some images pulled from Earth Cam webcams in New York City, New York, Wildwood, New Jersey, Gettysburg, Pennsylvania and St. Louis, Missouri.

To wrap up this photo-filled blog post, I encourage you to get out and enjoy today if you are able. I know I will be going for a hike this afternoon here in Pennsylvania!

