WASHINGTON - The National Museum of African American History & Culture will officially open its doors to the public on Saturday but you can check out what it took to build the newest museum on the National Mall in an amazing time-lapse video.

Shot by EarthCam, the video shows the construction process – starting from the ground-breaking in May 2012 right up until September 2016.

The grand opening weekend will include festivals, artistic performances and a special dedication ceremony where President Barack Obama will cut the ribbon.
