

Stunning 9/11 Time-lapse Video Will Move You to Tears

A man with a webcam created one of the most moving time-lapses of all time.

Despite the over-used catchphrase, "Never forget," it's very easy for Americans to put horrible tragedies out of their minds once they're no longer hot-button issues.

The September 11th, 2001 terrorist attack on the World Trade Center is one of the most horrific tragedies in recent history, and really helped to unite us as a country (and also divide us in some ways, but that's another issue). But, even then, people tend to lose sight of the lessons we've learned from this event, and fail to pay proper tribute to the victims who fell with the buildings.

Brian Cury, founder of EarthCam, took it upon himself to have his team install a webcam overlooking the site - days after the buildings collapsed. It has been running there on time-lapse for ten years now, tracking the building of the memorial. And now we can watch it.

Check out this stunning tribute to all the lives that were lost and people who helped get us through one of our nation's largest catastrophes.
