

You can follow the progress of UK's new baseball stadium online

Drew Franklin | July 26, 2017

Kentucky head coach Nick Mingione was excited to talk about his program's new baseball stadium in the works, expected to be ready to go for the 2019 season, while chatting with the KSR listeners today.

Mingione said the steel will begin going in this week and fans can follow the progress via EarthCam with several live shots of the construction site.

Here's how the projects stands today via the panoramic shot, one of seven different angles available for your viewing pleasure.

Obviously there is a long way to go before it becomes a baseball stadium, but now you know how to check in from time to time to see what kind of progress is being made on the future home of your 2020 College World Series champions.

Thanks again to Coach Mingione for coming on. You can get the podcast here.

