

New York: the museum to tell September 11

May 18, 2014 · Elizabeth Sutton

September 11 to tell that person never forgets , is the goal of the Museum has been inaugurated by Barack Obama in New York. For a week the families of the victims can come and visit this place full of incredible emotion. Visitors will enter from May 27

The Ground Zero Memorial is first an impressive outdoor space in which two black pools built on the site of two towers of the World Trade Center, plunged into the bowels of the city. All around, these basins , the names of the victims are engraved.

The museum, which will open is huge , he remembers , photographs of victims, tower structures , personal effects , sounds recorded conversations September 11, 2001 . Everything is designed so that the visitor impregnates tragedy, as a window on the lives of 2,983 victims of the attack .

Video performance as a tribute to families

For 10 years, from 2004 to 2014 , Brian Cury , CEO of EarthCam company filmed the reconstruction of Ground Zero. He put cameras around the site to monitor the reconstruction. 10 years later and millions of images later, he offers this video to victims' families and friends .

A guide app for visiting the Memorial

9/11 Museum has on iTunes downloadable audio guide for free.

Robert De Niro has lent his voice to this iPad iPhone app, but the app is available in several languages, including French . Its objective is to educate visitors and tell them what happened on Sept. 11 when the terrorist attack . Evidence decorate this application.

In addition, it is possible to visualize on the Time Line interactive computer of September 11. Not to forget , never French article translated using Google Translate.